The State Flower of Montana.

BY OLIN D. WHEELER IN WONDERLAND '99.

A beautiful flower, a beautiful river, a beautiful valley, a magnificent mountain range—such is the Bitter Root. The flower, which gives name to the rest, is a small plant that blooms in June, common to many of the Montana valleys. It seems to thrive more especially in the Bitter Root Valley, and this circumstance has given to the valley its name.

The petals are of a beautiful, delicate pink or rose color: the root is edible, that is, it was formerly, at least, much used by Indians and mountaineers for food, but it is very bitter. The Indians dry it, and in this state it will keep for years.

The botanical name of the plant is Lewisia rediviva; the Snake Indians, Granville Stuart says, call it Konah; the Flathead, or more correctly, Selish Indians, characterize it by the word Spitlem.

The Bitter Root is the state flower of Montana, and it is entirely worthy of the honor thus shown it.

Annual Letters.

In sharp contrast to the discouraging "stop my paper" of a few of our subscribers are the cheering words which accompany the renewal subscriptions of many others. Would that we had room for more of them but these few must suffice.

LEWISIANA is invaluable to me.

I am glad it is to be continued for it contains much of interest to me.

May the Lewis race extend solid encouragement in the line of cash subscriptions and family records. Unborn generations will bless you for the work you are doing. I hope the present generation of men will see to it that their posterity may be justly proud of their ancestors.

May each living member of the family "Lewis" so triumphantly emulate the Christian virtues and patriotism of all of their heroic Revolutionary forefathers that when the trumpet call of the Captain of our "Common Salvation" is sounded, the unanimous answer "present" may respond from each redeemed soul as a glad anthem of praise and jubilee.

GENEALOGICAL RECORDS.

Explanations, Abbreviations, etc.

For convenience the records of the various Lewis families are divided into Books and each Book into chapters. At the head of each Book appears the name of the earliest known ancestor of that family. The List of Books is a complete index to the Books as published to this time. New Books will be added from time to time as new branches of the Lewis family are found. As soon as Books are proved parts of others they will be merged into the Books to which they belong. Each name is numbered when first printed and whenever the name is repeated this number follows in brackets. The abbreviations commonly used in genealogical work are used: as b. for born: d. died: m. married: m. (1) first wife: dau. daughter: unm. not married: v. p. see page, etc.

Hints for Contributors.

In writing matter for the printer use only one side of the sheet, note paper preferred. In giving dates, give year, month and day whenever known. Write all middle names in full. Give names and addresses of such people as you think may be able to complete the record but get it yourself if possible and spare the editor. Old newspaper files, tomb stones, family Bibles and records, official records of the town, school and church, burial certificates, county and probat records, old deeds and letters are some of the more important sources of information. Don't forget however the stores of information which the old people can give—Get them interested and then "pump them dry." Most important of all, don't get discouraged yourself. How can you interest others, if you yourself are not alive with enthusiasm?

JOHN LEWIS, Wales to Va., 1640

CHAPTER XXVIII.

FROM GENEALOGY OF THE LEWIS
FAMILY BY WM. TERRELL LEWIS.

Jesse Pitman (74 v p 88 Vol. IV) was about six feet in stature, weighing about one hundred and eighty pounds, with blue eyes and light hair. He was a blacksmith by trade and also a farmer. He inherited the homestead of his father, to which he added many acres during his life. On the top of a brick house which he had erected was a fish-pond well-stocked with fish. His house by some accident, caught fire and consumed his fish-pond. This is the first instance that we have on record of a fish-pond being burnt up. He served two tours in the Revolutionary war (entering at the age of 16), part of his time under Baron Steuben. He was in all the principal battles fought in Va., Penn, and N. J. and, finally, witnessed the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown.

The following is from an obituary notice in the Charlottesville Republican:

Mr. Lewis exemplified the true meaning of "Virginia hospitality;" the utmost stranger as well as any of his neighbors were received and hospitably entertained at his mansion; the poor were made participants of his bounty, and none were ever sent away empty from his doors; his servants were treated with kindness and humanity, and in all the relations of life, as husband, father, master, citizen, neighbor or friend he was exemplary and correct. Mr. Lewis was from his earliest youth a zealous Republican, and such he continued to the end of his life. Mr.

Jefferson, on one occasion passing his residence, remarked to a friend: "That in such men as Jesse Lewis consisted a nation's safety." He is now gone to reap his reward in another and a better world, as he gave good evidence that his peace was made with his Maker, and trusted in the merits of a crucified redeemer for salvation. Peace to his ashes! Let the rising generation imitate his example, and long will the blessings, which he aided in securing to our common country, remain as beacons for all mankind.

His remains were inhumed at the old homestead, one mile west of the University of Virginia, where he was born, raised and had spent his life. The place is now (1892) owned by one of the Randolph family, where his tomb, enclosed with a stone wall, can be found with the following inscription upon it:

UNDERNEATH THIS SLAB REPOSES
THE BODIES OF

JESSE LEWIS and of NANCY, his wife.
He was born on the 13th of May, 1763, and died the 8th of March, 1849.

She was born on the 21st of March 1764, and died the 2nd of November, 1849.

They were married on the 13th of April, 1786, and lived together sixty-three years in uninterrupted harmony, and enjoyed the universal respect of all who knew them for their integrity and uprightness.

FROM THE BROOKLYN EAGLE.

Morgan Lewis Livingston, the scion of one of New York's oldest and most distinguished families, was found dead in his room, having died of heart disease some time in the night. He was sixty-nine years old. When found he was sitting in an easy arm-chair, fully dressed in the old fashioned garb he habitually wore, but his rigid, waxen face told that life was gone.

Mr. Livingston had lived almost as he died—alone. His associates were few. His intimate friends and relatives have almost all been gathered to their fathers, his only immediate surviving relative was his sister, Miss Julia Livingston of 202 Boulevard. A member of the Society of the Cincinnati, he had been a practical recluse for about thirty years. He had a little fortune, a portion of which came by inheritance. He was "a gentleman of the old school," and lived the methodical life of a man whose habits have long become fixed. He wore the fashionable garments of the last generation and used no color but black.

Almost every afternoon he took his way to Delmonico's and seated himself in the cafe, where he might smoke and drink and read the papers at his leisure and chat with a few old friends.

Mr. Livingston came of a remarkable ancestry, many of his family having been of National repute, yet, though a man of ability, he had never done anything himself to make his name known. He was the son of the late Morgan Lewis Livingston (6 v p 103, Vol. IX.) His mother Catherine Manning d ten years ago. The father of the dead man came of a family of fourteen children. Of these the late Robert J. Livingston (Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry's father) was a very wealthy and prominent New Yorker, and Mortimer Livingston, another brother, a steamboat magnate, was one of the four owners of the yacht America, the vessel which brought the America's Cup to this country. Another brother the late Maturin Livingston, was the father of Mrs. Ogden Mills, (v p 54, Vol. IV and p 103, Vol. IX.)

CHAPTER XXXIV.

FROM YORK, PA. DISPATCH.

Samuel Smyser was found drowned on the afternoon of Mar. 15, 1899 in the upright drain pipe through which the water from the cellar of his residence flows off into the Market street sewer.

The discovery was made by his niece, Miss Laura Lewis, who has been living with him for a number of years. He was old and feeble but was wont to go frequently during the day to the cellar to measure the depth of the water in the drain pipe. Miss Lewis, instead of finding the old gentleman in his usual stooping attitude over the pipe, a notched stick in hand, taking the depth of water, saw his feet protruding above the rim of the pipe and his body wedged tightly down into it.

Samuel Smyser was born in West Manchester township in 1813. He worked on the farm of his father until 25 years of age, when he began life for himself. In 1863 he came to York and has resided here ever since. In 1866 he m Rebecca M. (59 v p 173 Vol. VII) dau of Dr. Robert Lewis, late of Dover. Mrs. Smyser has since died. The deceased was a member of the Union Lutheran church. He was an important factor in the business interests of York, and owned a large quantity of land in the western outskirts of the city, the sale of which amassed him considerable of a fortune. That portion of the city known as "Smyser's town," which lies south of Princess and west of Penn streets, was laid out and developed by the deceased. The splendid tract of land occupied by the York County Agricultural society was purchased from Mr. Smyser. The deceased was at one time a director in the York County National bank and was identified with various local business enterprises in past years.

CHAPTER II.

BY MARY J. LONGNECKER, ALLENTOWN, PENN.

Samuel (3 v p 14, Vol. X) left his home after his father's death, in 1822, and entered the employ of the Colemans, at Elizabeth Furnace, Lancaster county. Upon the death of the Colemans he entered the employ of the Ammons, at Pine Grove, Lebanon county, and remained with them until 1828, when he came to Lehigh county. By this time he was thoroughly grounded in all the details of the iron business, all of his former employers having been well known iron masters. Here he was employed by Stephen Balliet and Samuel Helfrich as superintendent of the East Penn forge and furnace, located at the base of the Blue Mountains, back of Slatedale. The furnace was later known as Balliet's furnace. With him was associated his brother William, who died in 1830. Of this furnace only the crumbling walls remain.

By this time the anthracite coal business was attracting the attention of capitalists and Mr. Lewis resigned his position in 1832 and left for the coal regions and engaged in the mining and shipping of coal to Boston, Baltimore and other places.

In 1846 he came to Allentown and once more turned his attention to the development of the iron industry and in that year he built two furnaces known as the Allentown furnaces, which were started in May, the first iron being drawn in October of the same year. These were the golden days of the iron industry in the Lehigh Valley and the two furnaces netted the owner a profit of $80,000 the first year. Later these works were enlarged and successive furnaces of that corporation were erected in 1853, 1854 and 1872. All of these stacks have since been enlarged and remodeled and their capacity is now about 50,000 gross tons of pig iron per annum.

DEATHS.

In New Haven, Ct. Mar. 22, 1899, Asa Lewis Chamberlain, ae 69. He leaves besides a widow, a son, Asa L. Chamberlain, Jr., of the New Haven Water Company, and a daughter, Miss Hattie Chamberlain, who resides at home.

Mr. Chamberlain was born near Durham and came to New Haven when a young man. He was for many years in business with the late Joseph Jennings and is one of the best known former business men of the city. He has been connected with the Water Company about 20 years and was the first vice president and a director in the corporation at the time of his death. Mr. Chamberlain took an intelligent interest in public affairs, not ostentatiously, but in a manner that made his counsel sound and frequently sought. It can be said of Mr. Chamberlain what cannot be said of every man who dies, that he lived a long and useful life, increasing steadily in the respect and affection of those who knew him.

In Chicago, Ills. Mar. 4, 1899, Daniel Lewis Shorey, ae 75. The Dial says: Few Chicagoans have been so thoroughly identified with the higher intellectual life and social aspirations of the community as was Mr. Shorey, even during the busiest years of his professional career; and few have left behind them so much good work accomplished without ostentation, for the furtherance of culture. He was b in Maine, Jany. 31, 1824, and was educated at Phillips Andover, Dartmouth, and the Harvard Law School. He taught for a few years in N.H., Mass. and Washington, and was admitted to the Mass.

bar in 1854. The year following, he removed to Davenport, Iowa, where he practised for ten years, also serving terms as city attorney and president of the school board. In 1865 he came to Chicago, and continued in the practice of his profession for twenty-five years. When, after the Great Fire, it was proposed to establish a public library in Chicago, Mr. Shorey took an active interest in the matter, and drafted the Illinois statute of 1872, one of the first and best of the State laws relating to public libraries. He became a member of the first library board organized under this law, and occupied that position for eight years. In 1880 Mr. Shorey became a member of the City Council, serving the public in this capacity for six years. In 1890 he retired from his profession, took a long trip abroad, and, returning, settled down to spend his closing years in his library. He read widely and deeply in several directions, particularly in the history of the French Revolution, upon which subject he had made himself an authority. The establishment of the University of Chicago soon after his retirement, and his appointment as a Trustee of the institution, provided a happy outlet for his surplus energies. Living close to the University, he visited it almost every day down to his last illness, and devoted himself to its interests with a zeal that few men in similar positions have time to display. The tale of his public services is not complete without mention of his eighteen years' presidency of the Western Unitarian Conference, and his lifelong activity in the cause of liberal religion. Preserving throughout his life a youthful freshness of feeling, his nature was so genuine, and his integrity so absolute, that he won both love and respect in a measure beyond most of his fellow-men, and his death leaves, to those who knew him intimately, the sense of an irreparable loss, of a void that can never be filled.

A suggestion for a change in school gradation, made by Superintendent Lewis of the St. Paul schools, may incite extended discussion among educators. It is for a ninth grade in the grammar or graded schools. Between quitting the eighth grade and going to work, thousands of children in Minnesota have a year to spare: Mr. Lewis says. That may be true also in other states, dependent upon the laws regarding the age of employment. For these thousands every year the present school system makes no provision. This want would be met, Mr. Lewis thinks, by the establishment of a ninth grade, in which pupils lacking in the time and means, or in capacity and natural endowments, for the successful pursuit of a high school course, could complete and round off a common-school education. "We should change the point of view entirely," Mr. Lewis argues. "The grade schools cram for the high school, which a relatively small number enter. The high schools cram for the university, which still fewer reach. The system should be planned for the many. The grade schools should be the basis. High schools can take up the work where they leave off, and the university should accommodate itself to the high school. Then, those who do not gain the higher courses will have the benefit of the best that can be given them, and those that pass through all the schools will not only have lost nothing, but will come out the stronger for the more thorough work done in the grades below."—*N. ### The Blind Boat-Builder.

There are seven Herreshoff brothers, and three of these have achieved success in life encompassed in a black world of nothingness. Their eyes are sightless. When John Brown Herreshoff, the president and head of Herreshoff company, was a boy, just beginning to look forward to the work and joys of manhood a veil was drawn gently over his eyes by the unseen hand of Providence, and gradually the visional world faded out of his life. He had whittled out miniature boats of pine from the time his hand was big enough to hold a jack-knife, and when he was fifteen had built a boat large and staunch enough to sail in Narragansett Bay. Soon afterward his blindness came. But it would have been inconsistent with his determination and force of character to have given up the lifework he had mapped out for himself. He made his sense of touch do much of the duty belonging properly to his useless eyes: his mind acquired new acuteness and he went on making boats. There are few more active business men to-day than he. Morning finds him regularly in his office at the shops, attending to his correspondence, which is read to him, and talking over business matters with callers or his brother, Captain "Nat" Herreshoff, who is superintendent of the establishment. Every day he makes a tour of the shops, guided by an attendant, and devotes several hours to the inspection of the work in progress. His perceptions have grown so keen that little escapes him, and he finds no difficulty in personally putting together intricate machinery. In the afternoon, after the demands of the day have grown less urgent, he steps aboard his yacht and steams away, feeling, though he cannot see, the beauties of the bay.

The Herreshoff family is of German origin. Charles Frederick Herreshoff came from Germany in 1790, and went to Providence, where he was entertained by John Brown. A few months after his arrival he married the daughter of his host. He purchased a large tract of land on Providence Island, and here it was that John the father of the present family was born. Their mother, whom John married in 1833, was Julia Ann Lewis, the daughter of a sea-captain.—Democrat's Magazine.
